Calendar Description:

~~An introductory course on Asia-Canada interactions. It will survey various issues, both historical and contemporary, including those involving Asian-Canadians. Breadth-Humanities/Social Sciences.~~

Introduces developments in Asia from a comparative and transregional perspective, focusing on economic interactions, cultural influences, as well as migrations. Surveys various issues, both historical and contemporary, including those involving diasporic Asian communities. Breadth-Humanities/Social Sciences.

Course Details:

~~This is an introductory course on Asia-Canada interactions. Its primary purpose is to survey, from a political-history perspective, several dimensions of East Asia-Canada (or East Asia-West) relations including those surrounding Asian-Canadian communities. After successfully completing this course, students will have the firm knowledge of major issues and concepts, well-known historical incidents and trends, and key figures and organizations in East Asia-Canada relations, all of which we often find in contemporary public discussions. As such, this course, together with ASC 102, is designed to form the entry-level foundation of the Asia-Canada Program. Only English-language materials will be used.~~

~~Before course registration, students are strongly encouraged to visit, and familiarize themselves with, the website of our textbook (www.pacificcentury.org).~~

Fall 2018

RATIONALE (must be included)

After an extensive consultation and review of the program, it was decided to offer only one introductory course to Global Asia to serve the robust enrolments since students are also now expected to pursue a 100 level language course in their first year. Accordingly, ASC102 will be dropped. Upper Division courses are expected to take over much of the content in more depth.

Calendar Entry Change

Name of Program or Name of Faculty: Asia Canada Program

Rationale for change:

Established in the mid-1990s, the Asia-Canada Program (ACP) was path-breaking in offering a platform for both Asian and Asian-Canadian Studies, and similar programs have since been established in American universities, such as Georgetown and the University of Connecticut. However, in the two decades since the ACP's creation, the field of Asian studies has undergone significant changes, as has SFU's faculty research and teaching complement. Correspondingly, student interests and needs both during and after their undergraduate career have undergone changes with the influx of international students.

The goal of the original program was to reflect two areas of studies, Asian Studies and Asian Canadian (or Asian Diaspora) Studies – the program offered, on one hand, the opportunity to study Asia (especially East Asia) in a global and diasporic context, and, in particular, the connection between Asia and contemporary Canadian society; and, on the other hand, Asian Canadian studies. However, as was pointed out by an External Evaluation Report in 2015, this double focus on understanding Asia in a diasporic context was not clearly differentiated from Asian Canadian studies, and the original program's educational goals remained ambiguous. Consequently, it is necessary to further explain the pedagogical aspirations of the revised minor.

In brief, the educational goals of the revised minor are to furnish students with the following skills and knowledge:

Core Skills

The program will help students to

- develop their ability to clearly communicate ideas as well as work effectively on their own or as part of a group through the completion of various written and oral assignments.
- develop their ability to critically evaluate information by encouraging them to deconstruct academic arguments about Asian history, society, culture, politics, and economies.
- develop an introductory facility in one or more languages of the region.

Knowledge

The program will help students to

- acquire a more linguistically enriched understanding of East or South Asia.
- acquire a broad and multidisciplinary understanding of Asian countries from local, comparative, and international perspectives.
- acquire a greater appreciation of the historical and contemporary interconnectedness of peoples and cultures and thus, a personal outlook in tune with the global society of the 21st century.

Although the revised program has a modern/contemporary focus, its courses will permit students to develop an historically grounded and interdisciplinary perspective in examining Asia.

Students will not only have access to courses on a region of considerable political change, impressive economic growth, and vibrant cultural activity. They will be able to take courses that foster a better appreciation of Asia's historical, political, economic, and cultural interconnections with other parts of the world, which arose from the global flow of ideas, goods, and people.

In keeping with this updated and broader focus, there is a separate proposal to rename the minor "Global Asia", and replace the acronym "ASC" with "GA".

The program revision intends to retain and improve the language requirement from its predecessor. Lower Division requirements revises and merges the two introductory courses into one for the region, however, they also include an option to develop either a vertical intra-regional comparative introduction (to China and South Asia in Asia, for example) or inter-regional trans Global perspective. Upper division requirements maximize flexibility for students in their selection of electives.

The proposed minor will be better able to ensure course availability and provide more explicit laddering of courses with MOUs among participating departments and revised governance. All participating departments will revise the prerequisites for their listed courses and consent to three- year reserves on their courses as needed to ensure access for Global Asia minor students.

Efforts to promote the revised minor, such as during History's recruitment visits to high schools, should also generate interest in other units at SFU. Consequently, all departments participating in the revised minor (e.g. History, International Studies, Humanities, Political Science and World Literature, Communication and Sociology and Anthropology) will be able to draw from a larger potential pool of students for enrollments.

Finally, the revised program will work to articulate the key feeder courses with many of our local institutions which offer various Asian studies and Asian language studies courses to encourage transfers. There are plans to develop Asian/field schools which may be attractive to such students. Pathways to recruit from FIC transfers will be improved.
