IS 813 African Economic Development: Theory and Practice

Instructor: Morten Jerven

Prerequisites: Enrollment in the MA in International Studies program

Course description:

With an emphasis on post-colonial Africa, this course introduces important aspects of development theory, and the practical application of these theories and concepts in African economic development. We will see how dominant theoretical paradigms influenced the formulation of development policy in Africa and how in turn these led to rethinking development theory. We will explore how theory and practice changed through time and place. The course gives a perspective on how scholarly 'discovery' and focus translates into policy formulation, and further how such policies perform and has performed in an African context. The course also invites students to explain why certain policies were adopted in specific countries.

- Economic Growth and Development

Research and Teaching:

Professor Jerven's doctoral research involved field research in Botswana, Kenya, Tanzania and Zambia culminating in a work on the post-colonial economic performance of these countries. The work is particularly innovative in investigating the construction of African growth data and how data quality issues are important to evaluation of economic performance.

Currently Morten Jerven is working on linking the work on post-colonial economic development with the economic history of colonial Africa. He is also doing work on the comparative economic history of developing countries reconsidering the larger narratives of the historical roots of poverty. His main research projects are focusing on the African growth data where the two related aims are to assess its quality and to construct a reliable basis to evaluate and interpret long term economic change in African economies.

Memorandum
Department of Political Science
Simon Fraser University

FROM: Prof. Douglas A. Ross, chair, Graduate Studies committee

TO: Dr. Paul Budra, Associate Dean, Office of the Faculty of Arts and Social Science

Date: 7 February 2011

Please find attached a request for changes in the requirements and the associated calendar language for the various graduate programmes in Political Science.

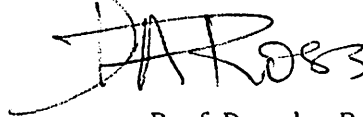

It was decided in several meetings in the autumn semester of 2009 that a new course in "Qualitative Research Methods in Political Science", designated POL 803, should be added to the roster of required courses for graduate students in our Department. The qualitative research course option is an alternative to the largely quantitative methods 'design and analysis' content that is offered in POL 802.

POL 803 was set up and approved by FASS and the subsequent SFU approval levels of Senate, and it is being taught this semester (11-1) for the first time by Prof. James Busumtwi-Sam. The change in the calendar language was not part of the initial submission that led to the creation of the course, hence this submission.

The proposed change in requirements affects all incoming students and those already in the programme may exercise the option to invoke the new wording/requirements as well.

Thank you very much.

Yours sincerely,
