COURSE DESCRIPTION

This course is intended to help students explore approaches, methods and techniques for teaching Asian or heritage languages in a Canadian context. Classes will be comprised of teachers of Japanese, Mandarin and heritage languages. Participants will gather for the first half of each class for theoretical discussion of issues and will be split into 3 groups (Japanese, Mandarin and heritage language) for more practical considerations for the second half of each evening. The Asian language groups will be taught in their respective languages for the second half while the heritage language group will be instructed in English.

Participants will consider the motivations and attitudes of students, teachers and the community and will discuss the appropriateness of particular aims for particular communities. Provincial and national curricula for these languages will be examined and evaluated. Participants will learn techniques for planning lessons, for evaluating, selecting and creating teaching materials and for presenting lessons to groups of students. Techniques for evaluating proficiency and learning will be discussed. Classroom management techniques available to teachers will also be presented. Finally, participants will consider how cultural considerations form part of an Asian or heritage language curriculum.
