PROGRAM IN LATIN AMERICAN STUDIES

FULL PROGRAM PROPOSAL

JOINT MAJOR IN LATIN AMERICAN STUDIES AND INTERNATIONAL STUDIES

Executive Summary

The Joint Major in Latin American Studies (LAS) and International Studies (IS) is designed for students who are interested in focusing and expanding their expertise in areas where these two fields of study intersect. Students who complete the joint major gain detailed insight into the social and cultural aspects of Latin America and the Caribbean. Students develop solid foundations in the study of Spanish (or Portuguese) and a grounding in knowledge from an international perspective offered by a focus on Latin America and the Caribbean in particular and international studies more broadly.

The program contributes to the wider international strategy of Simon Fraser University which, in the context of globalization and Canada's increasing dependence upon economic, political and cultural ties with the rest of the world, aims at raising the profile of the university internationally through innovation in the curriculum. Offering students an opportunity to combine Latin American Studies and International Studies will be a natural outcome of efforts by both programs to expand their offerings to a growing number of SFU students for whom "Thinking of the World" entails majoring in internationally oriented fields.

The Joint Major in LAS and IS is intended for Canadian and International students who are interested in international development, security and conflict, and social and cultural issues within a Latin American/Caribbean context and beyond. The program will be taught through existing and a few new courses (to be taught in the 2009/10 academic year) at the SFU Burnaby (majority of LAS courses and lower division IS courses) and SFU Vancouver campus (majority of upper division IS courses). Lower division courses will be offered as lectures while upper division courses will be offered as seminars.

Both intellectual and career considerations motivate our students to combine regional specialization with mastery of a core social science discipline. In addition to the analytic and methodological skills gained through pursuit of the joint major in LAS-IS, students are better able to market their skills to potential employers whose offerings may entail work involving Latin America. Currently, several students pursuing the International Studies major also plan to complete a minor or an extended minor in Latin American Studies. The proposed Joint Major provides an opportunity for these and other students to add further to their credentials and better prepare them for careers in the international arena, whether in the public, private or non-governmental sectors.

Curriculum

1. Student outcomes

Students will gain the capacity for analyzing problems in an interdisciplinary framework and a broad knowledge of Latin American issues in a global context. Students will receive international experience through a semester of work/study abroad and will be able to demonstrate language proficiency in Spanish/Portuguese.

2. Curriculum requirements

All courses for this joint major program currently exist in the SFU Calendar. Housed jointly in the Program in Latin American Studies and the School for International Studies, the joint major consists of 12 to 13 lower division units plus language training/proficiency for the Latin American Studies Program and 12 lower division units in the School of International Studies. Both programs require 20 upper division units to be completed, including the Capstone Project, an independent reading and research project under the supervision of a LAS Associated faculty member.

3. Course structure and class sizes

The joint major required courses and optional courses are diverse in format, including lecture-based instruction as well as interactive, discussion-oriented classes and tutorials. Class sizes are equally varied, ranging from relatively large 100 level courses to classes of 30 or less.

4. Research implications

The ongoing research mandate of existing tenure-track faculty responsible for teaching the joint major designated courses will inform the course curricula.

5. Additional Comments: Course Substitution and Transfer Credits

No more than one directed readings course can be used towards completion of this joint major.

Students are required to complete a semester abroad through one of the following options: SFU Field School, SFU Foreign Exchange, SFU International Co-op or other international experience such as an internship or volunteer experience, subject to the approval of the IS Undergraduate Curriculum Chair.

Learning Methodologies

Diverse learning methodologies such as lectures, interactive classrooms and tutorials will be experienced by the joint major students.

Faculty

The program is interdisciplinary and draws from the existing teaching and research of many faculty. No percentage of their current teaching will need to be devoted specifically to the new program.

Program Consultations and Evaluations

The Notice of Intent was sent to the Undergraduate Chairs of those departments whose courses are listed as designated joint major options as well as to all FASS Undergraduate Curriculum Chairs. Without exception, it met with their approval. Once implemented, the joint major will be reviewed and evaluated by the Program in Latin American Studies and the School for International Studies.

Admission

The admission requirements will be the standard SFU requirements.

Appendix A – Proposed Calendar Entry

The Joint Major in Latin American Studies and International Studies is intended for students who are interested in international development, security and conflict, and social and cultural issues within a Latin American/Caribbean context and beyond.

Program requirements

Courses used toward the upper division Latin American Studies requirements may not be used as part of International Studies credit requirements, and vice versa. Any lower division course that counts toward the separate requirements for Latin American Studies and International Studies may be counted toward both. During the last year of their LAS-IS joint major program, students must take LAS 498-5 in which they will complete their capstone project. This project will be written according to the standards of their disciplinary joint major, and will generally be of approximately 6,000-8,000 words.

Students are required to satisfy the prerequisites of all courses (upper and lower division) that are taken within this joint major and should consult regularly with the program advisors regarding course selection.

Language Requirement:

The following courses or equivalents are required:

SPAN 102-3 Introductory Spanish I *

SPAN 103-3 Introductory Spanish II *

SPAN 201-3 Intermediate Spanish I *

SPAN 202-3 Intermediate Spanish II *

Or the equivalent in Portuguese *

 Note: Students who can demonstrate language fluency at an equivalent level may be exempted from this requirement.*

Required Foreign Cultural Component:

Students are required to complete a semester abroad through one of the following options: (Please consult the IS academic advisor for more information)

- SFU Field School <http://students.sfu.ca/international/>
- SFU Foreign Exchange <http://students.sfu.ca/international/>
- SFU International Co-op <http://www.sfu.ca/coop/>

Appendix B – Budget

The joint major is interdisciplinary and draws from existing teaching complement of the various departments identified. No additional courses, faculty positions, teaching responsibilities, space, equipment or library resources are required. The LAS and IS Undergraduate Curriculum Chairs will supervise the academic content of the joint major. The Latin American Studies and International Studies Academic & Administrative Managers and Student advisors will provide administrative support including student advising. These responsibilities are consistent with their current mandate and no additional resources are required.

Appendix C: Related programs in other British Columbia post-secondary institutions

UBC offers a Major and Minor in Latin American Studies within the Faculty of Arts. This interdisciplinary program includes courses in Anthropology, Art History, Geography, History, and Political Science, as well as language instruction in Spanish and Portuguese.

UFV offers a Minor and an Extended Minor in Latin American Studies within the Social, Cultural and Media Studies department, as part of its Bachelor of Arts program. Students may also specialize in Latin American Studies by completing the International and Development Studies option within UFV's Associate of Arts degree program.

UNBC offers a Major, Honours and Minor in International Studies, as well as a joint major in International Studies and Political Science, all of which leads to a Bachelor of Arts.

Trinity Western University offers a Major and Honours in International Studies, both leading to a Bachelor of Arts.

UBC does not offer an International Studies program but offers a Major and Minor in International Relations leading to a Bachelor of Arts.

Effective term and year: May 1, 2010
