Thesis

Candidates successfully completing qualifying examinations will be required to present a seminar on their research interests. The seminar will be presented before interested faculty and students prior to the presentation of a thesis proposal.

The candidate will present a thesis proposal which will be circulated to faculty and resident graduate students. The candidate will present this proposal at a departmental colloquium no later than the end of the fifth semester of residence. In addition, and prior to the completion of the thesis, the candidate will be expected to present before interested faculty and students, a report on the progress of his/her research. The timing of this report will be selected in consultation with the candidate's Supervisory Committee.

Thesis

Candidates successfully completing qualifying examinations will present a thesis proposal which will be circulated to faculty and resident graduate students. The candidate will present this proposal at a departmental colloquium no later than the end of the fifth semester of residence.

RATIONALE

The presentation of a seminar to the department was intended to demonstrate breadth of research interests. Our experience has been, however, that this requirement slows down progress in the development of a thesis proposal, which should be the candidate's primary goal at this stage of the Ph.D. programme.

The progress report was intended to provide a forum for feedback prior to the Ph.D. defence. In the opinion of recent graduates, however, it was felt that this report did not serve a useful function and should be eliminated.
