MEMORANDUM

FACULTY OF ARTS

To: Andrea Lebowitz, Associate Dean of Arts
From: Bob Menzies, Criminology Graduate Director
Re: Proposed Revisions to Criminology Graduate Curriculum
Date: 16 December 1994

Attached is the revised proposal for the addition of Selected Topics seminars to the School of Criminology's graduate curriculum. This proposal was approved in meetings of the School of Criminology Graduate Programs Committee and Faculty (on 29 June and 14 July 1994 respectively), and it received provisional Faculty of Arts authorization in the FAGSC meeting of 24 November 1994. The Library Course Assessment, which seems to be generally favourable, has now been completed. I've enclosed the 2 December 1994 memorandum from Ralph Stanton, along with my reply of 16 December (offering some additional clarification, in particular on the subject of projected seminar enrolments, which will be considerably lower than envisioned in the library report).

Further, in response to suggestions from yourself and the FAGS Committee, we've decided to scale back the original proposal, such that we're now requesting the addition of only two, rather than four, new selected topics offerings. The re-enumeration of CRIM 870 and CRIM 871 will remain affected. When implemented, our proposed amendment will modify the Calendar listings as follows (1994-95 version, page 283):

Currently reads:

CRIM 870-3 Selected Topics
Concentrated studies in areas of student specialization.

CRIM 871-3 Directed Readings
Intensive readings under the supervision of a faculty member, in areas of interest related to the student's program.

2/continued.....

To be revised to:

CRIM 870-3 Directed Readings
Intensive readings under the supervision of a faculty member, in areas of interest related to the student's program.

CRIM 871-3 Selected Topics
CRIM 872-3 Selected Topics
CRIM 873-3 Selected Topics
Concentrated studies in areas of student specialization.

Once again, many thanks for your help with this proposal. If you need any additional details, don't hesitate to get in touch (phone 4763, fax 4140, email menzies@sfu.ca).

With best regards.

RATIONALE FOR NEW COURSE PROPOSALS

SCHOOL OF CRIMINOLOGY

CRIM 872-3 Selected Topics
CRIM 873-3 Selected Topics
Concentrated studies in areas of student specialization.

RATIONALE:

Over the course of the past several years, School of Criminology faculty and graduate students alike have been undergoing a considerable diversification of academic background, theoretical perspective and substantive research expertise. In our ongoing efforts to shape course offerings to the academic needs of students, we find that our program has been increasingly confined by our inability to offer more than a single Selected Topics seminar in any given semester. An ever-expanding number of our M.A. and Ph.D. students are working in specialized disciplinary and inter-disciplinary subject areas that cannot be entirely accommodated by our five current "core" course domains (Criminological Theory, Phenomena of Crime, Criminal Justice Policy Analysis, Law and Social Control, Research Methods). In addition, faculty interest in Selected Topics seminars has correspondingly intensified, to the point where we are now receiving an average of two or three ST outlines per semester.

The addition to the calendar of these two proposed Selected Topics iterations, then, would very much enhance our programmatic versatility. We note, moreover, that various other academic units have already adopted a multiple Selected or Special Topics structure (there are, for example, 12 ST courses in Education, 8 in Business Administration, 7 in Computing Science, 6 in Physics, 4 in Linguistics, 3 each in Kinesiology, Economics and Biological Sciences, and two each in Engineering Science, Women's Studies, and History). In all instances, the mounting of courses in the CRIM 870-3 to 873-3 sequence will continue to be subject to the prior review and authorization of our Graduate Programs Committee.

We don't anticipate any additional imposed burden on faculty, library or other resources. First, in general we expect the mounting of two or three Selected Topics offerings per semester (i.e. CRIM 871, 872 and 873) will involved an aggregate enrolment of only 10-15 students. Second, it is important to stress that total registrations will not be affected, as Selected Topics seminars will be chosen by students in lieu of other optional calendar listings within an overarching structure of degree requirements that remains unaltered. Third, faculty offer these courses on a voluntary "availability-demand" basis, beyond their normal obligatory teaching load, with pro-rated accumulation of credit that can be ultimately applied to course relief in subsequent semesters (2 student seminar = 1/3 course credit; 3-5 student seminar = 1/2 course credit). Fourth and finally, given the low enrolments (almost never more than 3-5 per seminar), the majority of readings and other course materials can be assembled and distributed among participants and instructor without further stressing our university library resources.

Selected Topics subject areas and seminar content will of course be changing on a semester-by-semester basis. We expect to witness the inclusion of several other seminar topics during the coming two years, reflecting the myriad and multi-disciplinary interests of Criminology faculty and students, and including, among others, courses on feminism, law and the state; global criminality; environmental crime; law and mental disorder; and aboriginal justice. Five illustrations of Selected Topics seminars previously approved by our GPC under the CRIM 870-3 listing are appended hereto for the information of reviewers and committees.
