EARLY CHILDHOOD EDUCATION

Summer Session, 1990
(July 3 - August 10)
Tuesdays/Thursdays
13:00-16:50
Location: MPX 7600

Instructor: J.D. Clarkson

COURSE OUTLINE:

This course examines current trends, issues and research relating to the education of young children. Students enrolled in this course will examine a selection of philosophical and psychological issues relevant to the education of children in primary grades. As a consequence of this examination, students will be able to place current issues in an historical perspective and be in a position to offer constructive comment on some current points of concern in the field.

Topics to be discussed include:

- Relationships between early childhood education, education in later years, child care and schooling.
- The nature of child centered education. Topics will include: needs and interests of learners, growth and development as metaphors in early childhood education, and the place of aims in early childhood education.
- Instructional strategies, including an examination of direct instruction, play, and naturalistic learning.
- The importance of language experience and basal reader programs.
