Rationale for change:

Correcting the inconsistency in the Graduation Requirements. Presently, the calendar incorrectly says 2.0 GPA is required for the Honours program, but the university requirement is actually 3.0. To be consistent with the university graduation requirements, we propose to drop the mention of the Graduation Requirements in the calendar description of the GIS Honours program, and let the students use the official university guidelines instead (as is done in the calendar descriptions of other Honours Programs at SFU).

~~In addition to university minimum overall CGPA and UDGPA requirements, a minimum program CGPA and UDGPA of 2.00 must be obtained for courses used to fulfil the program requirements.~~

Name of Program or Name of Faculty

English, Faculty of Arts and Social Sciences

Rationale for change: In its response to its recent External Review, the English Department committed to creating more adaptable course containers, to generating new possibilities for upper-division service teaching, to allowing more opportunities for non majors and minors to take English courses, and to showing greater responsiveness to new areas of student interest. This major program overhaul—which includes many course deletions, modifications, and additions—is the direct result of this commitment. In addition, the English Department’s diminished faculty complement requires that we reduce the number of courses that we offer in order to deliver our full curriculum regularly and to represent it accurately to students.

Please note that many of the new and modified courses included in this program modification are proposed and are thus contingent on approval.

English and Communication Joint Major

Bachelor of Arts

The Joint Major in English and Communication will give students the opportunity to combine the study of literature, rhetoric and writing, and cultural criticism with inquiry into the history, methods, and social significance of communication. The goal of the program is to graduate students who are adept in the analysis of communication and media, versed in literary and print traditions, and proficient in the creative and rhetorical skills of effective communicative practice. The many natural intersections between these disciplines are well-expressed by the diversity of courses offered in both the English and Communication programs.

Rationale for change: In its response to its recent External Review, the English Department committed to creating more adaptable course containers, to generating new possibilities for upper-division service teaching, to allowing more opportunities for non majors and minors to take English courses, and to showing greater responsiveness to new areas of student interest. This major program overhaul—which includes many course deletions, modifications, and additions—is the direct result of this commitment. In addition, the English Department’s diminished faculty complement requires that we reduce the number of courses that we offer in order to deliver our full curriculum regularly and to represent it accurately to students.

Please note that many of the new and modified courses included in this program modification are proposed and are thus contingent on approval.
