MOTION

BACKGROUND INFORMATION

A national need exists to develop a corps of people with an understanding of the complex backgrounds of problems relating to Africa and the Middle East. The Canadian Government is heavily involved in Africa and the Middle East in the area of technical assistance where the needs it can attempt to satisfy are enormous.

Government involvement overseas is matched by the provision of training facilities within Canada. The Colombo Plan has been in operation for almost two decades and on October 31, 1969, no less than 724 persons were studying in Canada under its auspices. On the same date, there were 64 students from Algeria, Syria, Tunisia, and the United Arab Republic, 228 from other French speaking African states and 427 from Commonwealth African countries.

The second rationale creating the national need relates to the commercial and industrial needs of Canada. Until Canada develops broad based secondary industries, trade will continue to be directed toward established industrial areas. However, once secondary industries develop, Canada will have to compete in established markets and in the potential markets represented by underdeveloped countries. Potential markets already exist for two Provincial primary products in Africa and the Middle East areas which lack protein and workable soft woods.

In summary, a continuing national and a potential commercial need exists for a body of people trained in a wide variety of discipline relating to a thorough understanding of Africa and the Middle East.

From its inception, Simon Fraser University has enjoyed a clear field regarding Africa and the Middle East. No existing University in Canada has a concentration of faculty with teaching and research interests in these areas nor does any University possess library resources directed towards concentration in these areas. Faculty recruitment at Simon Fraser University commenced in 1964 and led to the employment of faculty with interests ranging from Africa to the Middle East to India. At present, there are 17 faculty interested in the coordination of activity regarding Africa and the Middle East. At the present time, Simon Fraser University is the only institution in Canada with interests in the modern Middle East; it places twice as much emphasis on Africa as any other institution in Canada and it is the only University interested in linguistics.

These interests have developed within departments. The point has now been reached whereby, in the interests of faculty and students concerned with Africa and the Middle East, emphasis must be placed on an inter-disciplinary approach. Both faculty and students are affected equally for a person working primarily in one field must be aware of developments in numerous other fields and must be able to draw on the knowledge, research and advice of others specializing in such fields.

The objectives of the program proposed are:

- A. To encourage inter-disciplinary approaches to the study of Africa and the Middle East.
- B. To provide students with a basis for a continuing interest in the area of their choice after graduation.
- C. To facilitate the inter-change of ideas and knowledge between faculty and students.

IMPLEMENTATION

The program will be implemented no earlier than the fall semester of 1971. The nucleus of the program at this stage will consist of the staff currently at Simon Fraser University who teach African/Middle East content orientated courses, and will include the current course offerings relating to Africa and the Middle East (see Appendix 1). If student and societal demand prove the viability of this program, the establishment of a major in African/Middle East Studies will be considered.
