DESCRIPTION:

Recent developments in microelectronics have hastened the arrival of computers in the classroom. This course will examine the various ways that computers might influence the teaching-learning process and classroom management. This is an introductory course in which students will develop a level of computer literacy sufficient for the intelligent and critical utilization of existing microcomputer hardware and software. It is not a course designed to prepare teachers to teach computing science courses nor will it prepare teachers to write computer-assisted learning materials.

Outline of Topics:

1. Operation of Microcomputers
2. Modes of Computer Utilization
3. Selection and Utilization of Software
4. Computer Literacy

Textbooks: Harper, D. & Stewart, J. Run: Computer Education. Belmont: Brook/Cole, 1983.
Moursund, D. Introduction to Computers in Education for Elementary and Middle School Teachers. Eugene: ICCE (University of Oregon), 1981.

Please note: A non-refundable computer user fee of $62.50 will be collected by the instructor on the first night of class.
