Re: HSCI 822 (3) Graduate Course Change

The Faculty of Health Sciences would like to request the attached calendar changes in the HSCI 822 course effective Spring 2017. The changes are proposed to avoid the confusion with two other HSCI course which has impacted the enrollment in 3 previous terms.
Thank you for your consideration.

Kind Regards,

Marina Morrow

Graduate Course Change

Attach a separate document if more space is required.

Course Subject/Number HSCI 822	Units 3	Effective Term and Year Spring 2017

Course Title Globalization and Health

Rationale for Change:
This change is to remove confusion among the titles and content of three courses (821, 822, 870) and to provide a more accurate title and description for 822 which will enable students to understand it as a distinct course.

Course Title Globalization and Health	Course Title (max 100 characters) Global Health Governance
Course Short Title	Course Short Title (max 30 characters)
Description The mechanisms by which globalization impacts health. Roles of technologies, politics, economics, legal structures, culture, and social environments. The positive and negative impacts of global trends in trade, ideology, governance, community building, conflict, poverty, and the environment. A case studies approach.	Description Focuses on the rationales and institutional arrangements needed for collective action to address the health impacts arising from globalization. Using case studies, the course provides understanding of the practical challenges of policy making and diplomacy in a global context. The roles and limitations of key institutional actors and governance instruments are assessed, along with emerging forms of global health governance as collective action responses to global health needs.
