Course Outline for IS 323 / 823 Africa Today and Tomorrow: Tracking Social Change and Possibility
Instructor: Elizabeth Cooper

Calendar Description

Survey course of major contemporary issues relevant to people's lives in Sub-Saharan Africa as well as major debates about these. Study of the historic, economic, political, social and cultural factors contributing to contemporary realities and perspectives.

Course Description

There are a few long-standing meta-narratives about Africa that problematically reduce the complexity and diversity of experiences that run across time and place as if 'Africa' could be known as one place, one history, one reality. This course is not designed to provide a new meta-narrative. Rather, it is designed to provide access points for considering multiple, dynamic, open-ended trajectories relevant to contemporary African societies and their possible futures. We will use the access points of: youth; urbanization; global linkages; and future forecasts. Through each of these access points, we will consider how change has been understood in terms of explanatory logics (i.e. what has spurred change) as well as normative judgements of how lives have changed and will change. We will read across academic disciplines as well as incorporate literary fiction, journalism, policy, and other resources.

Learning Outcomes

The learning goals of this course are:

- To broaden and deepen students' knowledge of contemporary social, political, economic, cultural, and ecological conditions affecting possibilities for life across different parts of Africa.
- To enhance students' understanding and critical analysis of theories of drivers of change in recent histories and contemporary contexts of Africa, and especially those associated with demography and migration, imperialism and neoliberalism, globalized ecological risks, and epistemic and cultural innovation.
- To critically evaluate Africa's roles (material and epistemic) in international affairs
- To consider theories and evaluations of social change from multiple perspectives, and especially African perspectives

Assignments and Grading

1. In-class participation	10%
2. Issue tracking	10%
3. Group book review	20%
4. Major essay	30%
5. Take-home exam	30%

Graduate students will have an additional assignment and/or a larger version of the same assignments above (higher word count, higher minimum number of sources).

Required Readings

The course's customized set of required readings will be made available as electronic resources through SFU Library. Students should expect to read between 40 and 75 pages (e.g. 3 journal articles or book chapters) each week.

Course Outline for IS 439 / 839 Social Movements in the Global South
Instructor: Christopher Gibson

Calendar Description

Examines the nature, activities, and effects of social movements across the Global South. Uses an interdisciplinary approach to explore how social movements shape and respond to political, economic, and social transformation. Considers their relationship with political parties, states, and media and assesses the conditions under which movements emerge and succeed.

Course Description

From racial justice mobilizations in Brazil to pro-democracy protests in China, social movements around the world are commonly credited with driving multiple processes of political, social, and cultural transformation. But how can we define and understand phenomena as diverse and complex as contemporary social movements? This course aims to build a conceptual and theoretical toolkit for doing so by examining the interplay between foundational and emerging scholarship on social movements in the global South. The seminar introduces current research on movements globally and considers how such scholarship dialogues with canonical work from sociology and other social sciences. Thus, we become familiar with key concepts and theories that social movement scholars have used to gain analytic purchase on major questions in the field, such as the following: What are social movements? What do social movements do? How do they operate? What relationships have they had to political parties, states, and media? What kinds of consequences have they had? When do social movements get what they want?

Learning Outcomes

By the end of the course, students:

- gain substantive knowledge of social movement in the Global South;
- improve their comprehension of social scientific and journalistic arguments about them;
- improve skills in synthesizing such arguments;
- improve skills in crafting argumentative essays that critically examine such arguments

Assignments and Grading

Grades will be assigned based on the following formula:

1. Class Participation	10%
2. Critical Discussion Papers (5)	25% (5% x 5)
3. Responses to Discussion Papers (5)	5% (1% x 5)
4. Writing assignments (2)	60% (30% x 2)

Graduate students will write 500 words more per essay/paper.

Required Readings

Selected articles, book chapters, and other textual sources constitute the bulk of the required reading for the course. These readings will be made available in digital form online through our Canvas website and through the SFU Library website.

Required Reading

We will read large parts of the following books. Both are required:

Tarrow, Sidney. 2011. Power in Movement: Social Movements and Contentious Politics. (Revised and Updated Third Edition). New York: Cambridge University Press.

Tufekci, Zeynep. 2017. Twitter and Tear Gas: The Power and Fragility of Networked Protest. New Haven, CT: Yale University Press.

Selected articles, book chapters, and other textual sources constitute much of the required reading for the course. These readings will be made available in digital form online through our Canvas website, through the SFU library website, or through links to downloadable materials.

Re: New Course Proposal - Graduate Liberal Studies Program
Date: September 27th, 2021

The following new courses have been approved by the Faculty of Graduate Liberal Studies Program and are forwarded to the Senate Graduate Studies Committee for approval. These curriculum items should be effective for Fall 2022. Please include them on the next SGSC agenda.

Please note, attached to this proposal is a sample break down of costs associated with the travel study course proposal.

New Graduate Course Proposal

Course Subject (eg. PSYC) ^{HB} GLS LS	Number (eg. 810) 816	Units (eg. 4) 5
Course title (max. 100 characters) The Art of Writing
Short title (for enrollment/transcript - max. 30 characters) Art of Writing
Course description for SFU Calendar (course descriptions should be brief and should never begin with phrases such as "This course will..." or "The purpose of this course is..." If the grading basis is satisfactory/unsatisfactory include this in the description) Students will engage in a close study of form and technique in order to better understand the fundamental elements of writing. This study will be enhanced by a writing workshop, where students will improve their ability to write and critique extended work. Genres may include academic, non-fiction, and fiction, with an emphasis on the relationship between established literary/academic traditions and the production of original work.
Rationale for introduction of this course This course responds to demonstrated interest in writing among students, though past iterations have been taught under course numbers that are an awkward fit. Writing is a central recruitment strategy, and has been shown to strengthen the quality of work submitted by existing students in other GLS classes.
Term of initial offering (eg. Fall 2019) Fall 2022	Course delivery (eg. 3 hrs/week for 13 weeks) 3 hrs.week for 13 weeks

LS 816: The Art of Writing

In the practice of most arts, technique is widely discussed. Outside of writing programs, however, there is often surprisingly little discussion of writing itself, with a primary focus on what is being said (content) rather than how this is achieved (form). In this course, we will reverse this emphasis, traversing academic writing, literary non-fiction, and fiction to explore the common formal characteristics of notable writing (voice, detail, atmosphere, etc.) as well as qualities specific to each genre. To do this, we will be slow-reading each text - including some foundational GLS works - exploring writing techniques and strategies to better understand the elements of form. We will also embark on a hands-on application as students write one sustained piece of academic writing, literary non-fiction or fiction according to preference. This work will then be workshopped by class participants and the instructor in a rigorous and respectful application of the principles we have studied. At the end of the course, students will re-write their work for submission, with final projects appearing on The GLS Journal portal of The Ormsby Review. The overriding goals of the course are to emerge with an advanced understanding of literary form, a polished piece of publishable writing, and an effective writing tool-kit for future academic and creative writing endeavours.

Writing and story:

King, Thomas. The Truth About Stories: A Native Narrative. University of Minnesota Press, 2008.

Zinsser, William. On Writing Well. Harper, 2016.

Hodgins, Jack. A Passion for Narrative. McClelland and Stewart, 2001.

A note on writing guides: These are helpful volumes about writing. They are not sacred texts. They are there to offer suggestions and remind you of important elements. But they should in no way inhibit you and you are welcome to disagree with the advice, which is to say they are also there to generate debate.

Academic Writing - Texts to be made available through Canvas and the Library System

Cultural Criticism - broad and applied

Assignments:Weekly Letters: 20%

In many respects, this is a course in letters inspired by the great literary friendships. I see these letters as the course's "interior monologue" running under the surface of other modes of discussion.

There are several possible topics for the letters, beginning with the weekly reading. Usually the best of this type of critique will quote directly from the text in discussing the techniques and methods of the writers we are studying, gently unpacking what is 'happening' in each work and what you are struck by. In the sense that the letters are a dialogue you will want to touch on and respond to the thoughts of others within the letter itself. This can be a response to a comment made in class, a letter, or a piece of student work. Out of respect for everyone's time, please save your "replies" for group discussion rather than using the "reply" function on Canvas. This will give everyone equal space (the one letter a week), keep discussion going in class, and allow you to practice the art of weaving the ideas of others into your own submission.

The letters are also an exercise in developing yourself as a writer. Writers are people who write, which is why it is worthwhile to practice weekly if not daily through this assignment as well as through the continuous drafting of your final piece. Writers are people who observe, so you can bring the dialogue about writing into relation with the world as you are experiencing it, which may also inform your final assignment.

Within the letters, prioritize responding to others, commenting on the course texts, and exploring the relationship of the texts to your own thoughts in building up relevant and readable submissions that also further your final piece. Letters should be posted to Canvas weekly between Thursday and Monday (giving others the chance to read and synthesize the correspondence before our Zoom class on Wednesday). Each letter should aim to be about 250 words and no longer than 400 words and should be a reasonably polished submission.

Draft submission: 20% (5-7 pages, double spaced)

The major goal of the class is to write a polished piece of writing for publication in The Ormsby Review. We will do this in stages. First of all, use the letter writing and the writing assignments within the Hodgins (optional) to help you develop a working method and begin a draft. The first public stage will be to post a draft of your writing to Canvas on your assigned Wednesday. This draft will be read and 'workshopped' by the class, with comments submitted by each member of the workshop by Monday at noon of the following week. Drafts should be 5-7 pages double spaced, building toward the 14-17 double spaced pages that will represent your final submission. Your grade for the draft will be determined by the instructor, not by the response of the class.

In writing this draft, please choose from one of our three genres: academic, fiction, literary nonfiction or a hybrid of two of these (see for example, King who blends criticism and literary nonfiction).

Assignments should build on course texts, as you will have ready models and your fellow workshop participants will have a background. This will require different approaches depending on the form you choose. Topics might include:

Academic:

1. Apply the theory or a central argument of the Nora or Sturken to one of the course texts i.e. Nora's ideas of memory and history to Death in Venice, Sturken's ideas of memorial to Didion's "Letter from Paradise," the argument between Updike and O'Brien on literary biography as it applies to Didion's "John Wayne" and/or the other biographical essays in Slouching Towards Bethlehem.
2. Consider parallels, repetitions, regression, or cultural progress in comparing Baldwin's Notes of a Native Son with the current racial climate. An academic essay will use research sources to do this.
3. Make an argument about Daisy Miller, Death in Venice, or Wide Sargasso Sea as it relates to or fails to comply with the terms of the novella established by Mudford in Memory and Desire.
4. Make an argument by applying Hodgins' ideas on setting, point of view, character - or Zinsser on unity or style - to one or more of the primary texts.
5. Consider Thomas King's The Truth about Stories within the formal categories we have discussed. How does King's challenge to formal parameters also challenge conventional beliefs and power structures? What is the purpose of repetition and change at the beginning of each chapter?
6. Using the strategies and techniques we have studied, write an academic article arguing for particular social change post-pandemic.

Literary Nonfiction:

1. Write a personal essay on the idea of place, monument, and memorial that responds to themes in Sturken's "The Wall, the Screen, the Image" and Didion's "Letters from a Paradise"
2. Write a personal essay that uses the techniques of compression and overlap seen in Baldwin's "Notes of a Native Son" and Didion's "Goodbye to all That."
3. As above, consider parallels, repetitions, regression, or cultural progress in comparing Baldwin's Notes of a Native Son with the current climate, using a literary non-fiction approach rather than an academic one.

4. Write a journalistic piece of literary biography as in Didion's "John Wayne" or "Where the Kissing Never Stops," with an awareness of the possibilities and pitfalls of the genre as raised by O'Brien and Updike.
5. Write a piece of literary non-fiction that mines setting (as in Death in Venice) or the ambiguities of character (as in Daisy Miller).
6. Using the strategies and techniques we have studied, write a literary non-fiction piece reflecting on the experience of the pandemic.

Fiction:

Note: If writing fiction, choose the short story form or craft a highly self-contained episode of a novel or novella that is an appropriate 'excerpt' for publication.

1. Write a piece of fiction that is 'response' fiction in the way that Wide Sargasso Sea responds to Jane Eyre.
2. Write a piece of fiction uses the techniques of compression and overlap seen in Baldwin's "Notes of a Native Son" and Didion's "Goodbye to all That."
3. Write a piece of fiction that mines setting (as in Death in Venice) or the ambiguities of character (as in Daisy Miller).
4. Write a piece of fiction mining ideas of monument and memorial that responds to themes in Sturken's "The Wall, the Screen, the Image" and Didion's "Letters from Paradise."
5. Using the strategies and techniques we have studied, write a piece of pandemic fiction which explores or extrapolates on our current condition.

Workshop and zoom participation:20%

Everyone should write a critique of the draft of every other member of the class. Each critique should be approximately 200 words. Please use the questions pages 243-245 of Hodgins' "Revision" chapter to frame your response to fiction and literary nonfiction. In general, using the points made in the writing guides to leverage your suggestion will give us all a common reference point.

Responses should begin with comments on what you like about the draft. It is as important for the writer to know what is working as what is not working, if only to be able to build on these elements. Constructive suggestions come next but please consider the term – these should be both "constructive" and "suggestions." Use the Hodgins to help. If you feel every character seems the same in a piece of fiction, you might say: While I enjoyed x about the characters, I wondered about Hodgins' thoughts on individuating each one: “Do I have his voice, reveal her appearance, explore his personality?” On page 3, for example, it would be interesting to know what Moira is doing physically when she lies to Jack. The setting is very well established (“the plain was as dry and grey as the fallen elm that lined the Asbergers’ drive”) and it might benefit the story to bring this same level of detail to the characters.” Don’t say “the characters are all the same and boring.” This is unhelpful as it damages the confidence required to do a good re-write. And we all need to re-write. This may seem like obvious advice but experience suggests it bears repeating. Don’t fall back on “I was just being honest.” We all know that there are several ways to be honest and that some are more helpful than others!

Participation in the Zoom sessions is required. It is my hope that much of the ‘heavy’ work of the seminars will be accomplished through the letters and the online critique. The zoominars, as a result, will be the primary forum for high-level discussion, invited guests, and the delivery of information/background.

Final Assignment: 40% (14-17 pages double-spaced)

The final draft of your extended piece of writing is due in the final class. You will be graded on the way you built on your strengths, strengthened weaknesses, broadened the emotional and intellectual impact, and generally succeeded in crafting a fine piece of writing according to the standards we have studied and established as a class. You are encouraged to send your final, revised submission to The Ormsby Review for publication, but in the end this is optional.

LS 820: Travel Study - Oxford Lives

This course will centre on particular moments in the lives, culture, history and mythology of Oxford. Our central text will be Tom Stoppard's The Invention of Love which dramatizes the life of poet and scholar A.E. Housman in the context of nineteenth-century life and mores at Oxford University. We will also consider the lives and works of figures within the play including Walter Pater, John Ruskin, and Oscar Wilde. In contrast with this nineteenth-century Oxford moment, we will study lives and works that challenged the nineteenth-century paradigm including those of Iris Murdoch and V.S. Naipaul. We will also think about the "life of the city" in using Oxford as our base and will spend some time in the surrounding area, particularly Jane Austen's Bath. As the course takes place in partnership with the Oxford Centre for Life Writing, students will benefit from the Centre's numerous talks and activities as well as guest lectures by Oxford professors on theories and perspectives in life writing studies. Students will also be introduced to the resources of Oxford's Bodleian Library, with the expectation that substantial research will be performed among the Library's resources in completing final papers.

URB613 Storyscapes: Decolonizing the city through Arts and culture

Calendar Description

Explores the colonialism embedded into the stories, landscapes, and systems of the North American city, and how Indigenous laws, stories, arts and culture hold keys to planning sustainable, equitable, decolonized cities. Grounded emphasis on Indigenous and non-Indigenous landscapes and planning institutions and practices in Vancouver.

Course Details

Colonialism within the North American city has inscribed certain narratives and built forms onto Indigenous lands, while imposing genocidal legal and governance systems. Relying on harmful concepts like terra nullius and Doctrine of Discovery, urbanization has contributed to the erasure of pre-existing Indigenous laws, governance, knowledge systems, languages, etc. What are the transformative possibilities for planning when Indigenous cultures, languages, stories are once again visible throughout the city? Drawing on a variety of sources—including public art, video, and poetry—this class will explore the embedded assumptions and inequities within urban planning in Canada, and other ways of looking at/relating to the land in urbanized settings.

With an emphasis on Vancouver, traditional territories of the Musqueam, Squamish, and Tsleil-Waututh Nations, this course will pay close attention to the narratives and norms embedded into Vancouver's tangible and intangible cultural landscapes and planning approaches. The City's recent culture plan Culture/Shift: Blanketing the City in Arts and Culture will provide a guide to some ways Vancouver is attempting to decolonize. What are ways forward? What has been done and what can be done to make our cities and the ways we make decisions about them more reflective of Indigenous people's ways of knowing, shaping, and living in relationship with places? While critically examining the colonialism in our cities, this class will be rich with Indigenous voices to affirm that every North American city is an Indigenous City.

Weekly Schedule of Classes

Note all written and multimedia resources are available or linked within the Canvas course envelope.

Week 1. Introduction – Stories

Your story of place: self-location. I will introduce myself and go over the basic course content, including assignments, format, and my teaching approach/style. We will set the tone for the respectful circle we will be creating together over the next few months. I will ask you to introduce how and where you situate yourself, your sense of place, and how you see your relationship with Vancouver, or the city you connect to the most. This can include your own origins, positionality, identity, etc. How do you know and relate to the land, how would you like to know the land?

Indigenous Law: An introduction

Week 2. The City is Land

Vancouver: Musqueam, Squamish, Tsleil-Waututh Territory. Very often the North American city is portrayed as a non-Native place, with little history before colonial settlement. The city's narratives, governance systems, and built environments perpetuate the dominance of western colonial culture and the ongoing displacement/erasure of the original Indigenous cultures. But, like all cities across this continent, Vancouver is, what I call, an Indigenous City. These are the traditional, ancestral, unceded territories of the Musqueam, Squamish, and Tsleil-Waututh Nations. What are the stories, languages, laws of these lands and waters, of the rights and title holders who have lived here for millennia? How can we see beyond the shallow view of the urban cultural landscapes and narratives, and the values they convey? Stories and other cultural expressions are a big part of deepening understanding of cities, and the land on which they were built. In this class we will hear from people of these lands, to emphasize that these are ancient lands rich with history and culture, laws and knowledge that far precede Vancouver, and think about what that means for planning and decision-making on Indigenous lands.

Required reading:

Week 3. The City is Story

Language, narrative and cultural landscapes. During this class we will look more closely at the dominant colonial narratives that have been embedded into Vancouver's cultural landscapes, images, and identity. What has been erased/written out of the story? What are the consequences of erasure? In particular, how has the making of Vancouver impacted the original languages of these lands, hənq̓əmínəm̓ and Sk̓w̓x̓wú7mesh, and what does revitalizing the original languages mean for how people know and shape Vancouver? We will look at the importance and power of language in urban planning, such as mapping and naming, and how the story influences the public culture and identity of places and ideas of who has authority to make decisions.

Vancouver: City of Reconciliation

Week 4. Cultural Planning

Culture|Shift and making space for arts and culture. In 2019, the City of Vancouver approved a new cultural plan, Culture|Shift: Blanketing the City in Arts and Culture, which includes two other reports: Making Space for Arts and Culture, and the Vancouver Music Strategy. The plan emphasizes equity and access, and reconciliation and decolonization. In this class we will look at whether cultural policy and planning can help shape a more equitable, decolonized city. We will also look at the Auckland's arts and culture plan, Toi Whītiki.

Required reading: City of Vancouver, 2019. Culture|Shift
City of Auckland. Toi Whītiki Strategic Action Plan.

Week 5. Public Art

Visibility and voice on the land. One major aspect of Vancouver's culture plan is "Musqueam, Squamish, and Tsleil-Waututh visibility and voice on the land", which relates to recognition and redress of colonial erasures. Public art and other cultural expressions in public space can be a powerful way to share stories and affirm Indigenous cultural continuity on the land. In this class we will explore how public art and other forms of visible culture might contribute to decolonizing, and addressing the invisibility and marginalization of many communities from dominant narratives and cultural landscapes. How is art in the public realm approved? What about non-sanctioned and "DIY" public expressions? Who gets to approve and decide for what can/can't be in public space?

Required reading: Dylan Robinson (2017) "Public Writing, Sovereign Reading: Indigenous Language Art in Public Space", Art Journal.

McKenna, 2018. Blanketing the city. Salish Sea Sentinel.

View: Acts of Resistance (MOV feature).

Week 6. Music, Performance, Ceremony

Song, dance, oratory. During this class we will talk about the City of Vancouver's Music Strategy, which was passed along with the culture plan. How can music and public performance help to disrupt dominant stories and public culture? What are the cultural traditions of song and performance on these lands, and how have they been impacted by colonization? What are the dynamics of regulation and who has cultural space to perform? Please reflect upon the possibilities of sharing and experiencing culture that are not consumer based and corporate-sponsored, and questions of sanctioned/non-sanctioned public performance (eg. licenses and noise by-laws).

Required reading: City of Vancouver. Vancouver Music Strategy.

View: Speak Of What You Know by Ostwelve

Kevin Lee Burton's video "Nikamowin".

Week 7. Cultural Heritage

Cultural landscapes, memory, and commemoration. In this class we will look more closely at heritage policy and narratives of history and conservation. There are shifts happening to decolonize the ways in which history is recorded, talked about, managed, and preserved, but heritage policy continues to valorize old buildings and colonial histories. Who makes heritage decisions? How are these conversations opening up? Before class please reflect upon what you think are the dominant heritage narratives and cultural landscapes of Vancouver, and how they influence planning and ideas about whose histories matter and what needs to be defended/preserved. We will also look at major arts and culture institutions--such as Museum of Vancouver (MOV), Museum of Anthropology (MOA), and the Vancouver Art Gallery (VAG), to explore ideas of ownership and dissemination of cultural knowledge.

Required reading: First Peoples' Cultural Council. Intangible Cultural Heritage Policy Paper "52 East Hastings"
Musqueam Teaching Kit

Week 8. Women, LGBTQ + Two-Spirit

Safe, equitable, inclusive cities? While this course will weave diverse narratives throughout all conversations, with the recognition of intersectional experiences and identities, during this class we will focus on stories and experiences of women and LGBTQ+ and Two-spirit people, who are often overlooked and excluded in planning decisions and conversations. How do we create cities that are safe for all women and LGBTQ+ and Two-Spirit people, that reflect the truths of their lived experiences, contributions, needs, cultural brilliance? How seriously are cities taking the national crisis of missing and murdered Indigenous women and girls, violence and discrimination towards racialized women, ongoing violence and mistreatment towards LGBTQ+ and Two-Spirit people? What role do arts and culture have in helping bring about action? Can we see change reflected in urban planning and policy?

Week 9. Youth and Elders

Who speaks, who listens? Very often youth are treated as "citizens-in-waiting" with various levels of surveillance, policing and barriers within their everyday lives, and no meaningful voice in decision-making. The ongoing impacts of residential schools, which seriously impacted youth-Elder relationships, and colonial practises of age segregation have contributed to the erosion of youth-Elder cultural knowledge transfer, with Elders often shut away among their own age groups. What are the consequences of this separation, and of dominant ideas about what youth and Elders have to offer? How can arts and culture provide ways for youth and Elders to see their own voices, experiences, and aspirations reflected in their urban environment and everyday lives? What are other cultural narratives about the importance of youth and Elder voices and cross-generational relationships?

Week 10. Well-Being City

Sustainability, accessibility, health, food. The City of Vancouver has created many initiatives over the past few years to create a healthy, sustainable city -- such as Greenest City Strategy, Healthy City Strategy, and a Food Policy. In this class we will look at these kinds of approaches and whether they are inclusive of diverse communities, voices, experiences. Do they transform or replicate colonial systems and ways of living? Do they meaningfully include Indigenous people, knowledge, needs? How can cultural perspectives and expressions help to widen understandings of what a healthy, sustainable city means, and who needs to be leading these conversations?

Week 11. Time and Space: Urban cosmologies

Indigenous futurisms, sovereignty, and continuity. Across these lands, Indigenous people have diverse concepts and knowledge of space and time and cosmology. As much as the land matters, so also do imaginings and stories about our relationships to stars and the great beyond. As such, Indigenous people are actively involved in carrying on these important conversations and relationships through all kinds of technologies and platforms. How can other spaces, including virtual spaces, further augment stories and conversations related to land, sovereignty, responsibilities and possibilities? How can these technologies communicate important teachings, laws, remedies for urban planning and how we as humans conduct ourselves on the land and with our relations?

Women in Cities: A Critical Intersectional Practice

Course Description

Cities are dynamic entities; myriad social forces and processes inform their design and development. Gender and sexual politics are among the most significant -and least discussed- of these forces. Gender and sexual politics underlie urban form and function, from the built environment, to laws and policies, to cultural and memorial landscapes. Yet, cities are often imagined to serve a universal user.

Taking a critical and intersectional approach to the relationship between cities and the intimate lives of their residents, this course examines the interplay between bodies and cities. An intersectional approach allows for an engagement with the many other dynamics – including colonialism and racism – that operate in conjunction with gender and sexuality. We use texts, multimedia, and other tools (such as safety audits and collaborative mapping) to ask how embodied experiences of gender and sexual identity and difference shape our perceptions of cities and the strategies aimed at addressing safety and inclusion. We explore, among other topics, the explicit and implicit ways that forms of gender and sexuality (as well as sex acts and gender expression) are promoted or policed, how cities take sexual and gender politics seriously already, and how cities can improve their policies and services.

Course timing and format

4-hour weekly seminar.

Learning Outcomes

1. Students will be introduced to key organizing concepts around which scholars understand and analyze the topic of "women in/and cities". Students will examine the rationale and implications of employing specific categories of analysis and conceptual frameworks.
2. Students will recognize the role of municipal government and what Canadian cities are (and are not) responsible for. Students will consider the multiple levels of governance that are at play in addressing the needs and demands of women in Canada and beyond.
3. Students will examine specific cases related to women in cities: from key issues like mobility and safety, to strategies and solutions like secure housing and equity lens policy. Emphasis will be on Canadian municipal policies and practices.
4. Students will learn and apply research and analytical skills to produce work that demonstrates cumulative understanding of the course themes and materials. When it is possible to organize a field experience, students will have the option to work on a project with an NGO focused on feminist municipal activism.

Grading

Participation 10%

Preparation, oral and written participation in seminar, participation in small-group exercises, commitment and contribution to seminar workspace.

Journal/reading responses 25%

Written engagements with course texts.

Review project 35%

Book review of one course text. The project requires additional research, including identifying select literature and models of book reviews and reading beyond the required course materials. Students will present the findings of their research and their review of the text in written and oral formats.

Peer review 10%

Evaluate and provide constructive feedback on peer work following models provided.

Seminar facilitation 20%

Presentation of key concepts from a weekly text. Design and facilitate seminar discussion related to text/s and presentation.

NOTES:

This course is cross-listed as GSWS 423. There is a separate set of requirements for undergraduate students.

COURSE COMPONENTS

Notes about the sample list of selected readings: The weekly breakdown includes background and recommended readings that may not be included in the required texts. Some texts will be covered in multiple sections of the course. Many weeks will include a combination of academic texts and policy/grey literature to ground discussions of the cases under examination.
