RATIONALE FOR INTRODUCTION OF THIS COURSE

- 1. While many REM faculty members, their research, and some course content address Indigenous issues, there is no course dealing directly with Indigenous governance and resource and environmental management from an Indigenous perspective.
2. This course will provide an opportunity for students to engage with unique Indigenous perspectives and world views on otherwise familiar issues, including governance, planning, policy development, resource relationships of respect, reciprocity, responsibility and accountability.
3. The insights gained in this course will aid many students who, after graduate, will inevitably work for and with Indigenous communities.
4. In addition to Indigenous perspectives, the course material and discussions will examine other anti-colonial/anti-capitalist critiques and alternatives to mainstream resource and environmental management.
5. This course will be a core Planning specialization course for the Planning stream in the REM Major. All core courses in the program are expected to have PLAN code. It will also be cross-listed as REM 407.

Introduces students to the theory and techniques of public engagement, negotiation and mediation processes in planning. Begins with a review of planning and negotiation theory and this is followed by a review of techniques for the design and operation of public engagement in planning. Case studies and negotiation simulation sessions will be used to illustrate key concepts. We use the theories and approaches taught at the Harvard Negotiation Program including Harvard Negotiation Program simulation exercises for environmental dispute resolution. Students acquire the skills to design, manage, and facilitate public engagement processes in planning, engage in stakeholder negotiation, and resolve public disputes in planning.
