

SUMMER SEMESTER 2007 COURSE OUTLINE
EDUC 230-3 (EDUCATION)
INTRODUCTION TO PHILOSOPHY OF EDUCATION
C100

Philosophy of education is at an intersection of incredibly rich, diverse visions and arguments concerning aims, values, methods, and assumptions underlying education. EDUC 230 introduces you to a broad range of diverse philosophical viewpoints, such as the feminist, ecologist, spiritualist, multiculturalist, and critical pedagogist. Through the lenses of these diverse viewpoints, we will explore and examine the conceptions of education (what should our aims be?), curriculum (what should students study?), pedagogy (what does it mean to be a teacher and to teach?), knowledge (what is knowledge and what is it for?), and ethics (what morals and values shall we teach our young?). You'll come away with a comprehensive picture of the kinds of philosophical debates waged in education around these themes. We intend that you become a perspectival thinker, able to think, question, and interpret any educational issue from multiple perspectives. You will also emerge from the course with a strong but informed personal voice and stance, capable of entering into dialogue and debate with confidence
