

Spring Semester 1999

EDUC 222 - 3
Research Methods in Educational Psychology
D01.00

Dr. J. Martin
Office: MPX 8642
Tel: 291-3529
E-mail: martina@sfu.ca

PREREQUISITE

Corequisite: Educ 220

COURSE DESCRIPTION

This course consists of an introductory survey of research methods used in developing and testing theories in educational psychology, and in evaluating educational and psychological interventions. Its primary aims are: (1) to assist students to become informed, critical consumers of research in educational psychology, and (2) to provide a very initial introduction to practices of inquiry in the psychology of education. Topics covered will include: (a) research as a process and practice of inquiry; (b) research purposes, questions, and hypotheses; (c) types of research and research designs; (d) issues of reliability, validity, consistency, coherence, empirical and conceptual generalizability, and "yield;" (e) data collection and treatment; and (f) critiques of educational psychology and its practices of inquiry. Seminar activities will include discussions of course readings, critical studies of published research in educational psychology, the design of research studies, and presentations by active researchers.

REQUIREMENTS

Evaluation of student performance will be based on responses to a mid-term and a final examination, each of which will contribute 30% to the final grade, and on the completion of two assignments, each of which will contribute 20% to the final grade. Both examinations will consist of short answer and essay questions. Both will be in-class, closed book examinations. The first assignment will require a critique of a published research study. The second assignment will require the design of a research study. Both assignments will be in response to specific studies or areas of study that will be assigned during the course.

REQUIRED READINGS

Suter, W. N. (1998). Primer of Educational Research. Needham Heights, MA: Allyn and Bacon.

Additional readings may be assigned and distributed at the discretion of the instructor.